Also, the product website does not list any Win 10 driver for G41D3C. On 4th July 2016, N9XC wrote:-> post I'm assuming that most people who have AMD HD 65xx2's won't have an AMD HD 65xx0. If you aren't using that particular graphics adapter, then I would assume it won't be a problem for you. If you are using that particular adapter, and you don't have any audio problems, then you aren't running in that particular "problematic mode". And also, there have been a couple threads here that mentioned newer versions of the drivers for the G41D3C. If you are running in a mode that is more "updated" than the driver on the G41D3C, then you may not have any audio problems. I know that there are newer drivers on the G41D3C because I run in that mode. If you are not running in that particular "problematic mode" and you aren't having audio problems, then I would assume that you would want to consider what you are doing with your computer. Also, you could possibly use a microphone that has better support. I have a Blue Yeti USB Microphone and it works fine. Mumford wrote:Do you have Windows 10 driver for G41D3C? The audio codec on G41D3C is VT1708B from VIA. However, VIA does not supply Win 10 audio driver for this audio codec. Also, the product website does not list any Win 10 driver for G41D3C.
