Garrett Lee Dobson, known to most in the Duke community as "Gob," will forever be remembered for being one of the first students to join the Duke basketball team in the spring of 1959. This photo was taken a few months later. The caption below the photo was printed in the school paper. The Chronicle, in October of that year. By the time his team won its third national championship and he won his first, Dobson had become a fixture at all of Duke's home games, even though he'd never played in any. In fact, there were only a few occasions when he ever played a meaningful basketball game, but he did win the 60-yard dash for his high school (Southeast High) team in the spring of 1960, and he once signed up to play for the Harlem Globetrotters. By his junior year, he had become the team's unofficial photographer, capturing such images as those of Dean Smith and his first Varsity basketball team in the spring of 1960, and including this shot of a basketball game in the fall of 1963. Sometime in the late 1960s, Dobson left Duke, returned home to California, and became a chemistry teacher at Taft High School in Woodland Hills. When Duke did not renew his season tickets after the 1978-79 season, he contacted the business office and was surprised to find he had been re-enrolled as a season ticket holder that season. Dobson had chronic asthma and so many long days in the classroom and on the basketball court put a strain on his physical condition. For most of his career at Taft, he had "working out" classes for all of his students to fulfill a requirement that would get them into college. In the late 1990s, he had a heart attack and was forced to retire from teaching. He continued to live in Woodland Hills, California, near his alma mater, and died of an asthma attack in 2003. - Kristen 2d92ce491b
