KeyMacro is an incredibly useful utility, provided that you know how to use it. What is it? A utility to record a key combination, like alt-tab, ctrl-f5, or ctrl-s, and assign it a macro, like for example ctrl-s-focus. If you know the keyboard shortcuts to close a tab in Chrome or some other browser, for example, and how to stop the process of another one, you can assign a macro to both of those key combinations. What's it for? You may think that why would anyone need to have a utility like this? The good thing is that if you ever forget your code, like your websites name, username, password, PIN number, or whatever, you can simply save it as a macro and you are ready to go. How does it work? This key macro app is amazingly simple to use. When you are opening it, you will see the three icons, record, stop and change. The first and most basic thing you can do is to record your own key combination. Go to the record option, and when you see a white dot in the screen, press the corresponding key combination you want to record, and hold it down until the green box appears. Then move the cursor to the stop option, and start typing. That's it! Now that you have the recorded key combination in the stop option, you may assign a name to it. Go to the change option, and assign the name you like. The next step would be to assign the key combination to a macro. Go to the macro option, and you will see different categories. In this case, you would click the record and stop, and then click the type of macro you need. Now it's time to assign the macro. You may click the name of the key combination that you have just recorded, and assign it to the macro. Just make sure to keep it, because you can also edit the macro later. That's it! The next time you want to start using the macro, go to the macro options, and select the key combination you have just saved. Well, that was a basic guide on how to use KeyMacro. KEYMACRO license: It's ok to use this app in your personal project, but you are not allowed to distribute the app. KEYMACRO prices: $4.99 for a lifetime license A quick look at the

What's New In Tile Downloader?

Tile Downloader downloads openstreetmap tiles from tileserver.net and mapserver.net. These tiles have the format osm.png or osm.pbf. The downloaded tiles can be used with various openstreetmap applications, like the one provided by osm.org. Tile Mapper is a tool that combines different OpenStreetMap data sources. Tile Mapper Description: This tool is written in Java, the OpenStreetMap data is accessed via HTTP, and it is based on the OSM layers definitions. Tile Mapper needs a tile cache in order to work properly and you need to activate it by defining a folder on your computer where the data files are stored. You can use multiple folders to store the files in. The application allows you to view layers such as streets, buildings, parks, rivers, etc. It will also allow you to view data overlays like raster and vector. It can import data from a source such as Shapefile or CSV, and export data to a source such as Shapefile. Tile Mapper Features: • Tile Mapper can import and export data from different sources • It provides several tile overlays such as roads, rivers, buildings, parks and other markers. • This tool will also allow you to view layers such as streets, buildings, parks, rivers, etc. • You can define the information that you want to display • The application can view data overlays such as raster and vector • You can add data from a source such as shapefile, and upload new information • You can use the application to view an aerial view of the selected area Tile Mapper Requirements: • Java Runtime Environment • Windows • JRE 1.6 or higher • JRE 1.6 or higher • JDK 1.6 or higher • JDK 1.6 or higher • iBatis is used to work with the database You need to have at least the latest version of the OpenStreetMap data in order to use this application. The application is automatically launched from the desktop shortcut. You will be able to customize this shortcut by adding your own data and configuration file and make it appear on your desktop. The application will then be placed in a user friendly interface.
